This workshop is designed to address personal finance issues that farm family's face, as well as farm financial information. On Day #1, local experts will focus on personal finance, retirement, health insurance, crop insurance, and financial recordkeeping. On Day #2, Dr. Freddie Barnard from Purdue's Department of Agriculture Economics will use a case study to help participants calculate financial ratios and determine their operation's financial health. As part of that session, participants will better understand how to reach their operation's financial goals if they have not achieved them already. Participants will spend time discussing these topics in detail and will leave the program with the necessary tools to improve their financial positions both personally and for their farm businesses.
